In none of the Societies which have existed on the Earth has Woman possessed real Liberty and Independence:—no where has she been the maker of her own Destiny, the controller of her own Sympathies and Affections. On one half of the Globe she is looked upon as a creature made to minister to the sensual pleasures of Man—she is a thing bought and sold, a slave. And in her most favored position she is pecuniarly dependent, she is surrounded by a thousand obstacles which rob her of her liberty, and prevent all individual exertion and independent action. She is reduced in consequence, to tell the plain truth, to barter her Sympathies and Feelings for the house which covers her, the clothes which she wears and the food which she eats: she must, in a vast number of cases, sacrifice the true and pure impulses of her heart,—the dearest and most cherished astart of the consequence and most cherished astart consequences.
